Warrenton started as a dusty crossroads with a trading post nicknamed the Red Store and grew into the county seat after Richard Henry Lee donated the land for the town. Warrenton took its name from Revolutionary War hero Joseph Warren, and the courthouse still sits where the old roads crossed — which is why Old Town is so easy to wander. You can walk from the 1808 Old Jail (now a delightful museum) to shops, bakeries, and pubs without ever losing that historic skyline.

A few extras for the stroll: the Warren Green Hotel once hosted presidents (and is being restored as a hotel again, coming soon); in the 1930s couples flocked here for quick weddings down what newspapers called "Warrenton's Lover's Lane"; and local inventor Duvall Goldsmith gave the world the coffee percolator, so that second cup here is basically hometown technology. Today it's hunt-country charm with a wink — great shopping, whiskey with friends, and Friday night After Hours that prove a 200-year-old town still knows how to throw a great party!
